LITTLE CHICKS.

(By Michael K. Boyer, Poultry Expert)

After the first week of the chick's life, green cut bone, two or three times a week, is invaluable in promoting growth. But it must be fed fresh. After a few weeks old the chicks may be fed millet seed. Canary seed, in small quantities, may be given when chicks are about ten days old and older. Make the chicks exercise from the start. It is never too early to inculcate good habits. A little and often is a good rule in feeding chicks, allowing them but a brief time without food.

Drinking fountains should be constructed that the water will keep clean and sweet, and the chicks cannot get into them.

Broods of different ages should be kept separate. Their running together often results in trouble.

Great care must be taken in putting grease on little chicks, as it may close the pores of the skin, causing it to scale over. If this does not cause death, it will retard growth.

Short litter scattered on a clean sand floor and a little good millet seed thrown therein will keep the broods busy and in a healthful condition. A nice mellow bed of recently spaded earth will quickly be discovered by the mother hen, and she will at once teach her brood to take a vermin-cleansing bath.

The little creatures will soon show that they enjoy scratching in the soft earth. They will stretch out and take a regular sunbath, too.

Better boast of the number of chicks raised than the number hatched. It is easier to hatch chicks than to raise them, as so many reach the dying age sooner than the killing age. The main cause for much chicken mortality is over-crowding and lack of fresh air and proper exercise.

FOOD OFFICIALS ANSWER LASATER.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Food administration officials took issue with Lasater's statement before the committee and characterized it as ridiculous. In reply to his statement that livestock among the allies has increased, they pointed out that inventories show a decrease ranging from 10 to 30 per cent. The food administration, they said, never advocated $10 for hogs, but last November assured producers a minimum price of $15.50 and has maintained that with some difficulty.

Food administration officials further declared that they never advocated no use of veal and lamb except on meatless days and that instead of a deluge of immature animals being dumped on the market pointed out that market weights of animals are now of an average weight hitherto experienced.

The interview to which Lasater referred, food administration officials said, was repudiated at the time it was published.

NEW STRETCHING WHEEL SAVES TIME AND WORK FOR RED CROSS WORKERS.

Work in the preparation of surgical dressings which formerly occupied six women 55 minutes can now be accomplished by two women in 10 minutes, thanks to the "stretching wheel" installed in Red Cross headquarters at Cincinnati. It is a huge wheel, eight yards in circumference, on which eight bolts of surgical dressings can be spread at one time. The wheel is the invention of a Cincinnati man.
